"We Want To Reject Every Anti-Semitic Move, To Emphasize Not Evil Charges Against Jews But Our Own Guilt In The Crucifixion", Say German Protestant Churches At Cologne Congress

Leaders of the Protestant Church in Germany have called on all Christians in the country, no matter what church they belong to, to "think, speak, and act" in the spirit of the Vatican Council's proposed statement on Judaism and the Jews, writes John Cogley, in the New York Times. "We want to reject every anti-Semitism move; we want to emphasize not evil charges against the Jews as deicides but our own guilt in the crucifixion of Christ," says a statement from the 12th Annual Congress of the German Protestant Churches.

The Congress, known as Evangelischer Kirchentag, was held in Cologne. It was attended by more than 20,000 ministers and laymen from all parts of Germany, joined by prominent religious leaders from abroad.

"The realization of guilt compels us to repentance and to acts of brotherly love and justice toward the Jews," the statement adds.

"In our country where anti-Semitism, in which many Christians have participated, led to such murderous results, Evangelical and Catholic churches must with full determination put an end to the evil prejudices against the Jews and to the assertions of a collective guilt of the Jewish people in the crucifixion of Jesus by which, through centuries, the seed was planted for hatred of the Jews."

Acknowledging reports of highly placed resistance at the Ecumenical Council Vatican II to passage of the declaration on the Jews, the statement says: "What will happen in this matter at the Council is something which concerns all of us; it will make a contribution either to the continuation or to the overcoming of an old, heavy guilt and shame of Christianity."

The statement grew out of a working party on "Jews and Christians," which met for three days and attracted audiences of almost 4,000 persons. Among those who addressed this section of the Congress, says the New York Times, were Dr. Hans-Joachim Kraus, of Hamburg, and Dr. Helmut Gollwitzer, of Berlin, leading German Protestant churchmen; and Dr. Ernest Simon, of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

Besides encouraging passage of the Ecumenical Council's declaration on the Jews, the working party requested that a commission be set up to examine all German religious books, with a view to eliminating anti-Semitic passages.

During the meetings in Cologne there was a public dialogue between Dr. Joachim Beckman, president of the Evangelical Church in the Rhineland and titular head of the Congress, and Lorenz Cardinal Jaeger, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Paderborn. Cardinal Jaeger was asked about the fate of the declaration on the Jews. He replied that he had worked on it and was satisfied by it, and predicted it would be adopted.

"We must tell the truth regardless of possible losses and results," he added cryptically.

The remarks were widely interpreted to mean that the Fathers of the Council, in the interests of truth, would have to put aside any concern that passage of the declaration would make life difficult for the Christian minority in Arab lands.

It is known that Arab leaders object strongly to the declaration on the Jews and have made their objections known to Pope Paul VI and other high churchmen.

The Arab position is that adoption of the declaration would be a move toward recognition by the Vatican of the State of Israel and would be interpreted by the world at large as a sign of Vatican favoritism toward the Israelis in the Arab-Israel struggle.

Bishops from the Arab nations have been cool to the proposed declaration, and in some cases downright hostile. Maximos IV Cardinal Saigh of Syria, the leading Arab prelate and a dominant figure at the Council, has even charged that the enthusiasm of important United States bishops for the statement is due to crass commercial interests.

While Cardinal Saigh, who is a Patriarch of the Roman Catholic Church in the East, does not question the theological validity of the declaration, reports the New York Times, he has said it is being used for "political" purposes and therefore should be dropped.

Augustin Cardinal Bea, the man most responsible for the tone and spirit of the declaration, has said frequently that it is strictly a theological matter and has absolutely no political overtones.

Other prelates, who would be generally classified as ultra-conservative theologians, object to the declaration because they do not agree that Jews as such bear no special responsibility for the death of Christ.

Their argument is a legalistic one that holds that since the Jewish leaders who turned Christ over to the Roman authorities were the duly authorized spokesmen for the Jewish people, what they did implicated the whole people.

This position was restated, after the third session of the Vatican Council closed, by Bishop Luigi Carli, of Segni, Italy. But it is a distinctly minority view at the Council and was never heard from the floor.

The preliminary vote stating the very opposite was overwhelmingly favorable. Even the bishops from the Arab countries did not denounce the historic or theological import of the declaration, but merely spoke of it as "inopportune."

In another development within German religious circles regarding the Council's proposed declaration on the Jews, a letter was sent to the entire Roman Catholic hierarchy of West Germany by a group called the Co-ordinating Council of the Societies for Christian-Jewish Collaboration in Germany. It was signed by the Rev. Dr. W. Eckert, a Catholic; Dr. N. P. Levinson, a rabbi; and Dr. M. Stoehr, a Protestant pastor.

The letter called on German bishops to exercise their influence at the forthcoming session of the Ecumenical Council in favor of the declaration on the Jews. The letter reminded the prelates of a recent poll that disclosed that anti-Semitic prejudices were, still abroad in Germany and were furthered "not least by religious teaching and preaching even today."

The letter added that "it is not too much to assert that there is now prevailing a crisis of confidence vis-a-vis the Catholic Church." It was written late in June, says the New York Times, at a time when rumors that the declaration was being scuttled were appearing in the press in the United States, England, Germany, and Italy.

According to a source close to one of the signers, only five German bishops replied to the letter, and they were noncommittal. One complained that Jewish leaders had been trying to convert the declaration into political capital for Israel.

On the other hand, a source close to Vatican affairs reports that Arab pressures on the Vatican to scuttle the declaration have been stepped up as the mid-September date for the final session of the Ecumenical Council draws nearer.

Widow Of N.Y. Banker Was Honorary Chairman Of Federation

Mrs. Arthur Lehman, widow of the investment banker and a leader in New York philanthropic and cultural circles for more than half a century, died of a cerebral hemorrhage at her estate, Ridgeleigh, on Anderson Hill Road at Purchase, N. Y. She was eighty-three years old.

Mrs. Lehman, the former Adele Lewisohn, was for many years honorary chairman of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies. She was a board member of the New York Service for the Orthopedically Handicapped, and founder, says the New York Times, in 1934; and a board member of the Arthur Lehman Counselling Service.

A funeral service was held at Temple Emanu-El, Fifth Avenue and 65th Street, New York.

Mrs. Lehman inherited her interest in charitable activities and in welfare work from her father, the late Adolph Lewisohn, a leader in prison reform and in many other areas. Like her father, she was not only a substantial donor and an active fund-raiser, but she took responsibility for the administration of charitable agencies, serving as an officer or board member of many.

She was born in New York on May 17, 1882. Her mother was the former Miss Emma Cahn. She was educated at the Anne Brown School and attended Barnard College. In 1901, at nineteen, she was married to Arthur Lehman, brother of Herbert H. Lehman, former Governor of New York, and Senator; and of Irving Lehman, former judge of the State Court of Appeals.

Arthur Lehman became a senior member of the investment banking firm of Lehman Brothers at 1 William Street. He too was interested in charitable activities, and he was a founder of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies.

Mrs. Lehman devoted the early years of her marriage to her daughters, Dorothy, Helen, and Frances. Afterward she gave much of her time to less fortunate children, says the New York Times. Though a shy, reserved woman, she was active in the day-to-day concerns of the Service for the Or-

Eshkol's Hopes Include Doubled Population, Water, Ports, Israel To Be Medical And Cultural Center For Nearby Countries

Premier Levi Eshkol spoke of his predecessor, David Ben-Gurion, with a shrug. "He's making life a little more complicated," the Premier said, "but I don't think the Israeli electorate will be attracted by the cult of personality," reports the New York Times. Mr. Eshkol said that he did not believe Mr. Ben-Gurion when he announced that he would form his own political party in a bid to regain power.

"B. G. had asked me for years to become prime minister," Mr. Eshkol said. After Mr. Ben-Gurion finally retired in 1963, Mr. Eshkol commented, "I just didn't believe he would want to come back."

Mr. Eshkol leaned back, looking bulky in the compact modern chair in his office, and discussed the political split by recalling the early days of "aliyah", the coming to Israel.

"The fathers of the movement — you could count me in that group — intended to forge the strength of the working man here," said the 69-year-old Mr. Eshkol.

"In the Diaspora, the Dispersion of the Jews, we were detached from manual labor and pushed into the cracks of the local economy," he said. The feeling in founding a Jewish state was "one of unity," he said, an attempt to bring these people of various backgrounds and values into one nation.

"Now, to see people with whom you have been working for all these years trying for very unimportant issues to undermine the cornerstone of [illegible] — it's very painful," he remarked.

And what were these issues? Some have suggested that beneath it all Mr. Ben-Gurion wants satisfaction in the ten year-old "Lavon affair," a dispute over responsibility for an ill-fated security operation outside Israel.

"I know the mood of the public," Premier Eshkol said. "They won't want to look back." In any case, he added, Mr. Ben-Gurion was Premier during the early inquiries and could have looked for "truth and justice" then.

Mr. Eshkol slammed his fist on a light coffee table as he demonstrated how Mr. Ben-Gurion could have demanded action. The thump offered a suggestion of Mr. Eshkol's own ability to pound a table, says the New York Times. How then did he intend to campaign against Mr. Ben-Gurion for the forthcoming election? Apparently by ignoring him.

"We have a long-term plan", he replied. "We are 18 years old as a nation — but what about the next 18 years?"

"First, we have to double our population, or at least increase it, through immigration and our own natural increase," he said. "Some countries have a population-explosion problem. Here it is the opposite."

The Premier said that "much depended on the Russians." Although there has been almost no emigration of Jews from the Soviet Union, the Premier remarked, "I got my brother out a year ago and then, a bit later his wife."

He said he had also discovered a first cousin, Mrs. Anna Axelman, of Philadelphia, a few days previously. Mrs. Axelman, who had been given a trip to Israel as a birthday gift by her eight children, had advertised for information about relatives in the Yiddish-language newspaper, Letzte Neies.

She was eventually led to the Premier, who had only to ask, "Are you the granddaughter of Reb Itzik Yoel Liebes Shkolnik?" to find that she was the daughter of his Aunt Bluma.

Mr. Eshkol came from Russia to Palestine in 1914. His speech remains salted with Yiddish phrases. His English is less fluent but richer than that of most of his colleagues.

His feeling for the Soviet Jew remains strong. He hopes that Moscow will relax its emigration restrictions some day, says the New York Times, but says this is largely dependent on the state of relations among the major powers.

"If the world is not quiet, it hurts us here," he said. "There are 12 million Jews in the world, with three million of them in the Soviet

MARRIAGES

JEDEIKIN - STERN

The marriage of Miss Justine Adelaide Stern, daughter of Dr. Harry Joshua Stern, Rabbi, and Mrs. Stern, 3238 Westmount Boulevard, to Leon Jedeikin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Jedeikin, 11 Windsor Avenue, was solemnized at Temple Emanu-El, on Sunday, July 4, at half-past four o'clock, by her father, assisted by Cantor Otto Staeren. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was attired in a princess gown of antique-ivory-coloured peau de soie, appliqued with Alencon lace. It had a round neckline; short sleeves; and bouffant skirt fashioned with back panniers extending into a chapel train. Her veil of tulle illusion, edged with Alencon lace, was worn as a mantilla; and she carried a prayer book, which belonged to her maternal grandmother; also white camellias. Mrs. Robert E. Claymon was her sister's matron of honour. She wore an Empire gown of apricot-coloured chiffon; with a picture hat to match; and carried a crescent bouquet of white Shasta daisies. Mrs. David R. Asch, sister of the groom; and Miss Mara Lynn Stern, of New York, cousin of the bride; were attendants; each wearing a long, Empire gown of apricot-coloured chiffon. They had large, picture hats of that shade; and carried colonial bouquets of white Shasta daisies. Robert E. Claymon, brother-in-law of the bride, was best man. The ushers were: David R. Asch, brother-in-law of the groom; Herbert Goldstein, of Harrisburg, Pa., cousin of the bride; Mark Abramowitz, Murray Goldberg, Cal Kogan, and Richmond Lisser. Victor McCorry, organist, played the wedding processional music, accompanied by the Temple choir. The altar was banked with white Shasta daisies, gladioli, chrysanthemums, and greenery. The doors of the sanctuary were arched with garlands of smilax and small, white chrysanthemums. For the reception, table centrepieces of yellow roses and greenery were used as decorations. Mrs. Stern, mother of the bride, wore a long gown of jade-green mousseline de soie; re-embroidered with lace; with a large, profile hat to match; and her corsage was of white orchids. Mrs. Jedeikin, mother of the groom, wore a pale blue, crepe gown; and a pill-box hat of that shade; with a corsage of white orchids pinned to her purse. Mr. and Mrs. Leon Jedeikin spent their wedding trip on a Caribbean cruise, the bride travelling in a beige linen suit; and black straw cloche; with a corsage of red camellias. They have taken up residence at 3033 Sherbrooke Street West. The Lehmans first lived at 31 West 56th Street. Later they moved to 45 East 70th Street, where, over the years, Mrs. Lehman entertained frequently for the philanthropic, civic, and cultural causes with which she was associated.

At the town house Mrs. Lehman and her husband assembled notable collections of tapestries, rugs, paintings from the 15th century to the 20th, and other art objects.

Until World War II, Mrs. Lehman was also active in sports. She played championship tennis from the turn of the century until after the first World War, mostly at Long Branch but also at Elberon and Deal, N. J. She won 38 cups in championship play. As a golfer she competed in local metropolitan team matches in Westchester.

Mrs. Lehman's husband died in 1936. Her father died two years later.

In the 1940's Mrs. Lehman was active in the League of Women Voters, serving as a vice-president in 1946. For several decades she was also active in musical circles. She was a member of the auxiliary board of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York for many years and in 1947 was elected to the Society's board of directors.

The same year she took up painting, doing floral, still life, and landscape pictures.

Mrs. Lehman made a gift to Barnard College in 1957 that made possible Adele Lehman Hall, a building which also, says the New York Times, houses Barnard's Wollman Library. It was the College's first major addition since 1926.

Mrs. Lehman is survived by her three daughters, Mrs. Richard J. Bernhard, Mrs. Benjamin J. Buttenwieser, and Mrs. John L. Loeb; all of New York; ten grandchildren; and twenty-one great-grandchildren.

"WE WANT TO REJECT EVERY ANTI-SEMITIC MOVE"

In the United States, Jewish reaction to the proposed statement has ranged from enthusiasm to cynicism. Some Jewish spokesmen are apparently persuaded that the Council is holding a kind of second trial on the death of Christ and this time finding the accused innocent.

They find this understandably offensive. Actually, the purpose of the paragraphs exculpating the Jews from the charge of deicide is to clarify the true teaching of the Roman Catholic Church and to eliminate false teachings from popular Catholic apologetics.

Some bishops objected to the deicide charge being included at all, holding that it is contrary to the spirit of the document even to mention such an outrageous accusation.

But others, more realistic, insisted on its being included because the misstatement of the true doctrine is widespread and has had disastrous consequences for the Jews.

But both groups within the "liberal" party that is dominant at the Council would probably agree with the statement of the German Protestants that "the Jewish people has the mission, now as before, together with Christianity, to be witnesses of God's reality for all the world."

Support for the declaration with the College of Bishops is so strong that it cannot be voted down at the Council in Rome, says the New York Times. The only peril hanging over it now is that the majority of the bishops in attendance can be outmaneuvered by an apprehensive minority.

ESHKOL'S HOPES INCLUDE DOUBLED POPULATION

Union. Peace in the area of Israel is vital, of course, but peace among the major powers is just as vital," he said.

Premier Eshkol said that only 30 or 40 per cent of the country was developed. It needs industry, but it also needs agriculture.

"We are 17 per cent farmers," he said. "The philosophy of the Zionist movement was 'back to the soil,' when we started and I want to fight to keep that 17 per cent."

He spoke of the need for water and of the desalinization project that he hopes to inaugurate, of the need for ports and of the work that had gone into developing Ashdod. "We covered this piece of sand with a billion Israeli pounds," he said.

He said he had a vision of Israel as a medical and cultural center for nearby Asian and African countries and "even some day for our very neighbors, says the New York Times. "All this sounds like promises you hear before election — but it's more than that," he said. He could envision a stronger Mapai party emerging from the election, despite the split. "We shall see," he said.

THE TWO WORLDS OF THE WILLIAMSBURG Y

have responded by promoting the Y among their own. As a result, the Y's Hasidic membership is increasing.

Another people-to-people project sponsored this summer by the Y entailed the running, under Jewish group workers' supervision, of a day camp for children at the Fort Apache Indian Reservation in the Cibecue village of Arizona. Drawing on their rich backgrounds in volunteer service work at the Y, at camps and other Jewish organizations, the teen-agers applied themselves as group leaders, specialty counselors and as intake workers. In short, they performed in the manner and style of Jewish Community Center workers.

Through the planning and leading of work projects and educational and recreational activities, they became increasingly familiar with aspects of Apache culture and ways in which programs had to be molded to fit in with Indian customs. On tours and trips to surrounding places of interest in the southwest, they were able to establish relationships with Indian children their own age, who usually came along with the Indian youngsters.

From their Jewish visitors, the Apache children learned Hebrew songs and dances. The Apache children reciprocated by teaching their native songs and dances to their guests.

Every Saturday during their vacation of work at the Indian reservation, the Y members had an Oneg Shabbat program for themselves at which informal study sessions were devoted to aspects of Jewish identification.

The trail was blazed for the Jewish teenagers, in a way, by the 1964 summer service project which the 92nd Street YM-YWHA sponsored at the Salt River Pima Reservation in Scottsdale, Arizona. Last year's experience was so successful that the U.S. government absorbed it into its Anti-Poverty Program.

THE TWO WORLDS OF THE WILLIAMSBURG Y: THE HASIDIM AND THE Y.M.H.A.

By Murray Gunner, executive director of the Williamsburg Y.M. and Y.W.H.A.

One of the most dramatic changes which has taken place in the neighborhood in which the YM and YWHA of Williamsburg, in Brooklyn, N.Y., has been functioning and providing services for more than half a century, has been its emergence as a stronghold of Hasidim, due to the influx of ultra-Orthodox Hasidim, survivors of the Hitler madness in Europe.

At first the Hasidim were hostile and resentful towards the other Jews in the area. They taunted them for not being Jewish enough. They picketed stores owned by Jews who violated the Sabbath. They were openly hostile to the Y.

A Jewish Community Center is supposed to serve all Jews, whatever their points of view. But how do you serve a group that does not accept you, your agency or your principles? That was the question which confronted the YM & YWHA of Williamsburg.

The Y started serving the Hasidim by sponsoring a summer camping program for strictly observant boys and by offering the use of the Y's physical education facilities on a selective basis. With the help of our honorary president, Dr. H. Melmuth Sternberg, we were gradually able to interest a major yeshiva (seminary) in the Y's program and gained access to some of the homes of the Hasidim and to the PTAs of some of the yeshivas.

The Y's services became more acceptable to them, and soon we were able to have an outdoor Hasidic Art Exhibit a la Greenwich Village, an art class with a Hasidic rebbe as its instructor, an evening program for elementary school-age Hasidic boys, special tutoring classes, a modern dance class for ultra-Orthodox girls, a Counselor-in-Training course for Hasidic teenage boys, a gym-swim-and-exercise program for girls and women, a "Housewives' Holiday" for mothers looking for some form of relaxation, special nights for ultra-Orthodox men and boys who want to learn weight-lifting, boxing, swimming, and basketball, and adult classes in English.

Since then, the Williamsburg Y's program for the Hasidim has blossomed to such an extent that there are now more than 1,400 Hasidim from 23 different Hasidic sects enrolled as Y members, representing 45 per cent of the total membership. (The Williamsburg Y is the only one of the National Jewish Welfare Board's (JWB's) 447 affiliated Jewish community Centers, branches and camps with such a heavy Hasidic membership.)

The tremendous demand for resident camping for Hasidic boys has been overwhelming. The registration for Camp Mogen Avraham, the resident summer camp for ultra-Orthodox boys aged eight to 13, is highest that it has ever been, and there was a long waiting list. A summer camp for Hasidic girls, the first of its kind, was opened this year by the Williamsburg Y and named the Dr. H. Melmuth Sternberg Camp in honor of the Y's honorary president. A wide spectrum of recreational and educational activities, as well as regular Bible and Talmud study groups, were provided during each of the three-week camping sessions.

The Y conducts a leadership training course in camping skills for Hasidic boys which has been particularly popular. Interest is high in swimming, life-saving, and water safety courses and activities, as well as in judo, karate, weightlifting, volleyball, and tumbling. In fact, some of the Hasidim are becoming so good in these activities that a number of them win awards for proficiency at the Y's annual sports awards nights.

The Y has set up a specific Hasidic day camp program, in addition to its usual day camping activity, with time set aside for Torah learning, separate swimming, and special Hasidic staff. There has been a big rise in the number of Hasidic family memberships. The Hasidic women are taking advantage of the Y's "Housewives' Holiday" program, which provides steam room gymnastics, swimming instruction, and other physical education activities. This program is particularly popular because the Y has a baby-sitting service for the young children and provides lunch for them and their mothers.

Since "glat" kosher food was substituted for ordinary kosher meat and milk, Hasidic families are sending their pre-school youngsters to the Y's all-day nursery program. The ultra-Orthodox women are attending the Y's sewing, art and English classes in greater numbers. Tutoring in all subjects is in big demand. Classes in modern dance, cooking, wood-working, crafts, and music have captured the interests of the youth. A driver education course has also proven popular.

Many of the Hasidim feel so much at home at the Y that they bring their personal problems with them, problems related to sickness, finances, family relationships, children, and others. The Y's rabbinical staff refers them to the proper family or child care agency, hospital, United HIAS Service or other institutions.

The Hasidim have serious employment and vocational problems because of their religious requirements and other factors. Those who are more financially fortunate are in real estate, brokerage houses and the stock market; others have their own businesses in such lines as knitting, neckwear, handbags, silver-plating, diamonds, jewelry, and the "glat" kosher food industry. A few are religious functionaries such as sextons, teachers and the like.

But many are unskilled. They have no trade. Their opportunities for apprenticeship are limited. They are strict Sabbath observers and want to be off on Passover, Sukkos, and Shavuos, some of them even ask off for Purim and Tisha b'Ab, and this further limits their employment possibilities. The yeshivas do not provide vocational guidance and counseling services. There are very few employment resources to which the Hasidim can turn.

To meet this pressing need, the YM & YWHA of Williamsburg and the Federation Employment and Guidance Service are working on a program to improve the opportunities for the Hasidim to find employment. A register of employers who will accept Shomer Shabbos employees is being compiled. In addition, we are trying to open up or increase opportunities for them in Civil Service by making the right contacts, improve their chances for learning new trades and becoming apprenticed, and provide vocational guidance for yeshiva students.

The basic approach of the Y has been to offer the Hasidim the services and facilities which they cannot provide themselves. The fact that the Y has on its staff two full-time Orthodox rabbis and four part-time Orthodox rabbis has been a major factor in strengthening the confidence of the Hasidim in the Y. In addition, many of the Y's professional and clerical staff members can speak Yiddish, and this, too, has facilitated communication.

Not that there aren't problems any more. There are. There is still resistance on the part of the Hasidic hierarchy. Moreover, a number of non-Orthodox parents have complained about the great emphasis placed on Jewish content in the Y. Some of these who had come to register their children in the Y's camp withdrew their children after they saw boys with payes (ear-locks) and men with beards in the Y's lobby.

Working in the Williamsburg Y is like being in two different worlds at the same time!

But as we said before, we believe that a Jewish Community Center is supposed to serve all Jews, whatever their points of view. We have demonstrated to the Hasidim that we understand them, their needs, and their requirements, and that we are able to serve them to their own satisfaction. We have created the necessary atmosphere, hired the proper staff to meet their special requirements, made the schedule flexible enough to accommodate them, and given them the kind of programming they require. They

Leader Says To Teach A Judaism Relevant To These Times

A national Jewish leader has urged Jewish educators to teach "a Judaism relevant to the needs of our times."

Philip Bernstein, executive director of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, said that "too much of our Jewish education has ignored this relevance." As a result, "many of our young people turn away from Judaism without ever knowing what they are turning away from."

Speaking to the graduating class of the Baltimore Hebrew College, Bernstein pointed out that "Judaism has much to say on the Negro revolution in America, and on the emergence of the colonial nations. After suffering as slaves in Egypt, Jews have proclaimed for over 3,000 years that we must treat strangers as ourselves. It is no accident that Jewish organizations are in the forefront of the fight for human freedom."

He said that Judaism has much to say on social justice. "Hebrew has no word for charity, but it does have a word — Tzedaka — which profoundly commits Jews to assure the dignity and decency of all men."

Bernstein spoke of the uniquely Jewish sense of community, "a feeling of interdependence that has given great strength to our people. In free America, it has brought a cooperative flowering among persons of widely different points of view. This feeling is expressed in more than two hundred Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, in community education programs, in hundreds of agencies which represent and serve entire communities."

He suggested that educators err when they "skew Jewish education to a complete concentration on tragedy and bitterness." He asked that Jewish youth be imbued "with profound joys and satisfactions of Judaism" so that we can build toward another of history's "tremendously creative Golden Ages in Jewish education and Jewish communal life."
